CCIE DESCRIPTION

California community colleges have supported international education since the late 1960s. Since 1984, CCIE, California Colleges for International Education (CCIE), has assisted California community college faculty and staff to address issues related to international education. CCIE is a non-profit organization, whose membership currently consists of 92 California community colleges.

International education is a vital component of the community college curricula and mission. The California International Education Policy Resolution (12kb), signed into law on September 11, 2002, by Governor Gray Davis, maintains and bolsters the quality of international education in California by encouraging institutions of higher education to support programs relating to learning about different cultures, global issues, and promote the exchange of Californians and international students. It is commonly identified in California's Education Code as Section 66015.7. CCIE can and does play a central part in the development of new programs to support these efforts. As such, CCIE has become the primary voice of international education in the state and is instrumental in bringing the Chancellor's Office Global Education/International Education programs to scale system wide.

STATE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION AT CALIFORNIA COMMUNITY COLLEGS - 2015

- 47% of college mission statements mention International and/or Global Education
- 84% of the 113 Colleges have at least one international education program
- 69% of colleges receive no funding as a line item in college's budget for international education
- 65% have offices for international education, but lack infrastructure

CCIE MISSION STATEMENT

California Colleges for International Education is a consortium dedicated to the ideal of increasing international understanding through education and collaboration. The consortium helps support the growth of programs affiliated to international education: a) Faculty Exchanges; b) International Business; c) International Development/ Contract Education; d) International Students; e) Internationalizing the Curriculum; and f) Study Abroad. We work together to provide our students the opportunity to study abroad, improve foreign language acquisition and fluency, internationalize our curriculum, bring international students to our campuses and many other related International Education activities. In short, the work done by CCIE serves to support community colleges throughout California.

CCIE CONSORTIA VISION

- Encourage development of an international perspective in community college classrooms
- Increase awareness of and encouragement in international development through technical education
- Promote opportunities for sharing of international/ intercultural expertise

CCIE is a non-profit organization, which exists only through the efforts of its members. Your continued support, both monetarily and participatory, helps maintain our viability. Today, more than ever, international education is becoming more and more a part of curricula throughout the state and nation. An organization such as CCIE can and does play a central part in the development of new programs to support these efforts.
